Narrator: Student Voices: How Kristal used CaliforniaColleges.edu.

Kristal: My name is Kristal Roman and I'm currently a student at UC Berkeley, majoring in political science of ethnic studies and minoring in education with the hopes of pursuing a career in education, either as a professor, educator, or some work within student affairs.

During my high school career, the only assessment that I took was the interest profiler, so basically I was introduced to the interest profiler as I was navigating the college application process to kind of gauge what careers might be a good like fit for me and therefore like what I should go into studying in my college experience. I took the test, I believe like two times during my high school career. Those assessments have helped gear my college and career choices like more so now, but I think it's interesting that even though I didn't enter college in a like education pathway, education was one of the fields that consistently was like recommended to me through the interest profiler exam.

When I was navigating my career search and using like specifically the career search tool, I appreciated that it like referenced like the tasks that you would be doing as like that specific occupation. I think that was something that like in other websites I was kind of lacking of like, okay, sure, like these are the traits that you need, but like what are the specific things that I'm going to be doing in this job that I should start preparing for now?

Narrator: A career page is shown, which includes work activities and responsibilities related careers, academic knowledge, education level, and salary and potential growth.

Kristal: I liked that for some of them it mentioned like these are majors or areas of studies that would correspond with like the specific career choice. That was something that helped me narrow down like both aspects simultaneously of like my career and also like what I was going to be studying.
